ABSTRACT

In this annotated catalog, entries are provided for 372 mediagraphies. These documents list available educational media of the following types: (1) audioforms, (2) computer assisted and programmed instruction, (3) games and simulations, (4) projected media, (5) video recordings, and (6) multimedia kits. Entries are indexed according to subject, type of media, title, and key words in the title. (STS)

PREFACE

> It is no longer a question of worthwhile, but rather one of ways and means to an end now recognized by leading educators as a most worthy and fruitful one. It is not a question of the great possibilities or the practicality of such service; not a discussion of theories; or of some ultimate ideal for the remote future; we are past that period of thought and largely in action. It is now a question of how to realize in practice, and with the greatest efficiency and economy, the fulness of vision we already behold. (William H. Dudley, Organizing for Visual Instruction, U. S. Bureau of Education, Bulletin No. 7, 1921, p. 5)

This passage was written by the head of the first university visual instruction bureau in the United States concerning the value of motion picture service. More than fifty years later, his vision was yet to be realized, due in part, to the lack of or poor quality of the research tools required to obtain access to the educational media and to make decisions concerning their selection and utilization.

The purpose of this series is to develop those publications needed to provide such access to information pertaining to educational media. Currently planned are the following volumes:

1) A bibliography of guides to educational media software.
2) A directory of educational media distributors
3) A bibliography of educational media bibliographies and other reference books.

INTRODUCTION

Guides to Educational Media Software (GEMS), the first volume of the Educational Media Information Series (EMIS), attempts to describe all currently available mediagraphies, publications providing information about educational media "software." This term includes audioforms (tapes and records), computer assisted and programmed instruction, games and simulations, projected media (8mm and 16mm films, filmstrips, slides and transparencies), video recordings, and multi-media kits (combinations of these media). Not considered educational media are microforms, 35mm films, and those educational materials not requiring special equipment (such as, realia, opaque pictures, maps and globes, flannel boards, etc.) However, many of the mediagraphies do contain information concerning these materials as well as publications on a particular subject.

Only English language publications currently in print or available on microfiche have been included. Catalogs or promotional materials of those sources lending, renting, selling, and/or producing educational media software have been excluded. They will be included in a later volume of this series.

A wide variety of reference tools were searched to identify those mediagraphies which met these criteria. The primary source used was Resources in Education published since 1965 by ERIC, the Educational Resources Information Center. Although a number of documents which met these criteria were located through a computer search of ERIC's files, most resulted from a manual examination of Resources in Education through the July 1976 issue. Also searched were all issues published since 1967 through July 1976 of Library Literature, Education Index, Cumulative Book Index, and the Bibliographic Index; all volumes of the American Reference Books Annual, Audio-Visual Market Place, and the Educational Media Yearbook; other bibliographies of mediagraphies - Carter's Aids to Media Selection for Students and Teachers (Supt. of Documents, 1971 and 1973), Sive's Educator's Guide to Media Lists (Libraries Unlimited, 1975), Hart's Multi Media Indexes, Lists and Review Sources: A Bibliographic Guide (Dekker, 1975), Rufsvold and Guss' Guides to Educational Media (American Library Association, 1971) and Rawnsley's A Comparison of Guides to Non-print Media (ERIC Clearinghouse on Information Resources, 1975); periodicals which have columns announcing the publication of new mediagraphies such as Sightlines, AV Instruction, and Library Journal; and numerous subject bibliographies. No single source contained a majority of the mediagraphies described in this volume.

Every effort has been made to provide accurate and reliable data. I would appreciate any reader information regarding omissions or errors as well as reactions to this first volume.

I want to take this opportunity to thank all those authors and publishers who completed my questionnaire and sent their publications to me. This guide would not have been possible without their cooperation.

I also want to extend my thanks to Professors Dennis Pett and Carolyn Guss under whose guidance the idea for this book took shape while I was a doctoral student at Indiana University; to David Kranzler, for his many useful suggestions; to Professor Charles Pappalardo, Chief Librarian, Queensborough Community College, for freeing me to complete this book; to Judy Gill, my research assistant, proof reader and gal Friday, for being both meticulous in her work and thoughtful in her suggestions, and especially to my wife, Hilda, for her patience, encouragement, and continuous support.

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

The arrangement of the 372 entries in the Main Section of GEMS brings together those mediagraphies broadly covering the same subject. They have been generally classified according to the mediagraphy's main subject which is considered more significant than the media it includes. For example, the mediagraphy Selected Urban Simulations and Games appears under the subject classification "Urban education" and not under the medium classification "Games and simulations." Mediagraphies treating a wide range of subjects have been classified by medium. Those including three or media are classified as "Multi-media."

The annotation for each entry has been constructed based upon an examination of the mediagraphy and/or data provided by its publisher. A typical annotation would provide the following information, if available and applicable.

1. Business, industry and training
2. A Catalog of Nonprint Materials Useful in Computer Related Instruction
3. Ben Jones
4. 1973
5. 59 pages
6. Oregon Total Information System, 1200 Highway 99 North, Eugene, OR 97402-$4.50(pa)
7. ED 096 976-mf/1, hc/66f
8. Multi-media
9. Alphabetically by title
10. Subject
11. Descriptive
12. Directory of distributors
13.

Thus:

1. Subject or medium classification.

2. Title.

3. Author, editor or compiler.

4. Latest copyright date followed by edition number (frequency of publication).

5. Number of pages.

6. Name of distributor and ordering address (ordering number) followed by purchased price (paperback) and available discounts. Prices for British publications are in pounds (£) and pennies (p). Ordering information has not been provided for those publications out-of-print (op) or not available (na) from their publishers. These publications are only available from the Educational Documents Reproduction Service (see below).

7. ERIC Document number followed by the number of microfiche and frames to use when ordering copies from the Educational Documents Reproduction Service. See the latest issue of Resources in Education for ordering information. ("HC/" refers to the number of microfiche frames which is usually greater than the number of document pages. Entries in Resources in Education do not make this differentiation.) "None" indicates that microfiche are not available. All ERIC microfiche are available as a set from the publisher (See below).

8. Media included.

9. Method of arrangement. When arranged by subject, the number of headings is usually indicated followed, in parentheses, by a sampling of those used.

10. Indexes provided.

11. Type of annotation, descriptive or evaluative.

12. Special features, e. g., directory of distributors, planned revisions, bibliographies, etc.

13. Space for user's notes and comments.

Three indexes provide greater access to the entries.

1) A Key Word Index based upon selected key words in the titles of the mediagraphies.

2) A Media Index based upon the media included in each mediagraphy.

3) A Title Index.

The complete contents of more than one-third of the mediagraphies are available as a set of microfiche and can be ordered using the attached order form. This set includes all entries with an ERIC Document number.

A complete set of all entries on 4" x 6" file cards can be ordered by using the attached order form. These cards can be easily interfiled with the microfiche set, since they are both the same size. Cards can be added or deleted to reflect changes in the user's collection of mediagraphies.

Since new mediagraphies appear constantly and many of them are available for only a relatively short period of time, the need to locate and describe them is both a time-consuming and never-ending task. Therefore, supplements to this volume will be published at regular intervals indicating new titles, revisions, and those which have gone out of print. Hopefully, GEMS will encourage the publication of mediagraphies on such neglected subjects as history and literature.

COMMENTS:

This index consists of selected key words contained in the titles of the mediagraphies in the Main Section of GEMS. For example, Films on Ballet and Modern Dance is listed under both the key words "Ballet" and "Modern dance." Also included are the classified subject headings used in the Main Section. For example, the heading "Career education and guidance" is listed under both the key words "Career education" and "Guidance." Terms such as "Catalog," "Audiovisual," "Selected," etc., are excluded.

The numbers and letters following each entry refer to its location in the Main Section of GEMS - the number to the page and the letters a, b, and c to its location as the first, second, or third entry on a particular page. Letters are not given for subjects occupying an entire page.

This index contains the titles of all mediagraphies annotated in the Main Section of GEMS. Entries are arranged alphabetically, letter by letter, disregarding the articles "a," "an," and "the." For example, Filmography for American Indian Education appears before Film Resources on Japan.

The numbers and letters following each entry refer to its location in the Main Section of GEMS - the number to the page and the letters a, b, and c to its location as the first, second, or third entry on a particular page.

At times, the briefer form of the title is used.
